

Boggy Lake was found by some Murray Bridge windsurfers in the early 90's. It is now very popular.

It may be a bit hard to find on your own. All you need to do is head for Strathalbyn and take the turn-off to Langhorne Creek (Alternatively, you can come from Murray Bridge via the South Eastern Freeway).

17km from Langhorne Creek heading toward Wellington there is a patch of water on your right. This is it! Through the gate or just follow all the cars in the area with the roof racks loaded with windsurfers. It is just a paddock next to a lake with no facilities at all, but it does have flat water and the strongest most consistent wind in nearly any wind direction. A farmer owns the land but he will let windsurfers in there subject to a few rules:

1. No Dogs
2. No burnouts or speeding
3. No Litter
4. Lock the gate every time
5. No hassling the sheep or cows!
6. Fires OK subject to Fire Season Restrictions.

Camping at Boggy Lake is common and there is plenty of grass to rig up on.

For the speed sailors sail upwind to the speed strip next to the reeds on the south shore. It does not get any better.

There is usually a big crowd on the weekends.

If you cannot stay upwind yet, on a windsurfer or a kite, then Boggy is not very good because there is no beach to come in downwind.

Being able to touch the bottom for about 200m, you can always walk back, and water-starting is easy.
